

Trawler is back with another close encounter

By Daniel Savickas

Six months ago Travis Trawler contacted The LowDown claiming he had irrefutable proof of a Big Foot encounter in his back yard. This month Trawler's back, but he's not claiming he had another encounter with Big Foot; this time he swears he saw the Abominable Snowman.

"I was out in my back yard talking a walk with my good friend the King of Beers, when I saw something moving out of the corner of my eye," said Travis Trawler in a LowDown exclusive interview. "At first I thought it was Big Foot, again, but then I realized it was the got-damn Abominable Snowman."

According to Trawler, he is the first one outside of the Himalayas to see the Abominable Snowman and the first person in the world to have proof of his encounter.

"As soon as I saw the snowman I yelled to my old lady Betty-Joe to grab the camera," Trawler claimed. "Betty Joe came runnin' out with camera and fired off a shot before the beast ran off into the woods."

When The LowDown first reported on Trawler Betty-Joe was his ex-wife, but after the national attention Trawler drew from shows like Jerry Springer and Montel Williams shortly after his Big Foot encounter, the two worked out their differences.

"After I seen Travis on Jerry (Springer) I realized I still loved him dearly," said Betty-Joe. "Now since he seen the snowman thing in our backyard I'm sure we'll be on lots more talk shows, and we'll be getting lots more money."

When Trawler came forward with his "irrefutable" evidence of his Big Foot sighting, Betty-Joe was extremely vocal with her claims that the photo was a farce. She went as far as to say, "I know it's fake, he (Trawler) obviously just Photoshoped himself into the picture so it looks like he is standing next to Big Foot."

When asked if she thought

Trawler's proof of the Abominable Snowman was a fake, Betty-Joe claimed she knows it's real.

"I took the picture didn't I!" exclaimed Betty Joe. "I was mistaken about Big Foot, I now know it was real."
